It is true that for most countries default risk becomes a reasonable indicator of overall country risk because these other risks are so highly correlated with each other, but there are some countries where this is not the case. I am not a country risk researcher and I try not to let my personal views change the figures that come out of the analysis, as this would open the door to my biases. What are the pros and cons of debt when viewed purely as a source of capital? As you can see, the net impact of raising the debt ratio on the cost of capital will depend on where a firm stands relative to its optimal state; Underleveraged firms see their cost of capital decrease as the debt ratio increases, and their cost of capital decreases as the debt ratio increases. It is entirely Moody's fault to give your country a very low rating and you should discuss this with them! We see the exact opposite effect. Also, please don't take any of these numbers personally. The tax advantage of debt will increase with the marginal tax rate, making it much more beneficial to borrow in countries with high tax rates (Germany, Japan, the US) than in those with lower tax rates (Ireland, most of Eastern Europe).
