

After appearing in one game last year, Aaron Rodgers revealed he wants to play for a few more seasons. The 40-year-old's first season with the New York Jets ended in his first game with the team when he suffered a torn Achilles within four plays against the Buffalo Bills. Earlier this week, Rodgers appeared on Look Into It with Eddie Bravo and revealed his career plans. While he openly expressed his desire to keep playing, Chiếu ngựa nguyên khối gỗ lim he also acknowledged the need for fortune in the sport.

'I got back on the practice field late in the season, and I couldn't get to a top speed sprinting,' Rodgers said. 'But really been in a good place, rehab-wise, from the start and feeling really good. Again, I'm hopeful I can play two or three or four more years. But you need to have some good fortune there, too.' Rodgers' unprecedented recovery was well documented as he returned to the practice field months after getting ruled out for the season.

Unfortunately, web page his hopes of returning were shelved on December 20 as the Jets faded out of the playoff picture. The day before, however, he appeared on the Pat McAfee Show and said he wanted to play beyond 2024. 'I don't think that next year will be my last year,' Rodgers said. 'I felt like when I came here that I got kind of a renewed passion and love for the game. I felt like I wanted to play [with the Jets] at least two years and I feel like this year is kind of a lost year now that I only played a couple of snaps.

'I feel like I can play more years and I can be effective in my 40s, which is crazy because I thought that I'd probably be sitting on a couch somewhere at 40. But now I want to be starter at 40, I want to be a starter at 41. I want to see what I get out of this body.' Following his abrupt season-ender, the Jets went 7-10 and finished fourth in the AFC East. Aaron RodgersNew York JetsBuffalo Bills
