Bluebloods, an odd job man, a war hero...and a womaniser One attribute that has endeared Camilla to the nation over the years is her common touch - joshing with the public, happy to defer, ready to take a joke. Maybe that's because, among her blueblood ancestors, Giá tranh thờ Cửu huyền thất tổ there's a central core of working-class stock. Her father's mother, Margot Tippet, was the daughter of an odd-job man - and the granddaughter of a London butler, Henry Harrington, Giá tranh thờ Cửu huyền thất tổ who polished silver below stairs. Harrington was considered courteous and efficient and rose to be a gentleman's gentleman in the Belgravia household of a much decorated Army general, Sir Richard England. Harrington and his wife had 12 children who grew up to become clerks and saleswomen, garage mechanics and shop assistants.
